

A Guide to Selecting Second-hand Equipment

Assistive technology is a piece of equipment, device or system that provides people with practical solutions to everyday life activities. You can search our National Equipment Database www.askned.com.au to view a range of products online.

Buying second-hand equipment can be an affordable option for many people with a disability. However, it is important to keep in mind that buying used items or second-hand items does not provide the same consumer protection rights as when buying new items.

It is important to check the product's condition before buying or accepting second-hand goods.

You may want to seek assistance to ensure that a piece of equipment is suitable by organising a health professional to support you with selection of the equipment.

Keep in mind that it is better to avoid products that have suffered an impact. While a product may look undamaged, it may have weaknesses that make it unsafe for use. Repaired and modified second-hand products may cause serious injury or death.

Fitted items, such as stair-lifts or overhead hoists, would have been customised to suit the needs of the previous owner. Check that tracking and other fittings suit your requirements.

These items should have a safety check and may need to be reconditioned. It is advisable to consult a supplier of these items before making a private second-hand purchase.

The Australian Competition and Consumer Commission (ACCC) recommend checking the Product Safety Australia website www.productsafety.gov.au for a list of bans and mandatory standards to help identify products to avoid.

Indigo has a large range of equipment on display and products available to trial.

Our experienced health professionals can provide strategies and advice on the right product for you. Please contact us using the details below for further information or to book an appointment. Appointments can be conducted by phone, email, face-to-face or video call.

The following is a checklist of considerations to help you to select second-hand items:

Current Condition:

- Is the item sturdy and stable?
- Does the item come with full instructions for assembly and use?
- Do all parts work correctly?
- Does the item have safety instructions?
- What is the manufacturer's life expectancy for the item?
- Was the item broken or damaged during previous use?
- Does the item have tears, sharp edges, or points?
- Is the item missing any vital parts?
- Does the item have a history of being in an accident or being damaged?
- Is there hygiene issues associated with purchasing this second-hand item (e.g. urinal, mattress, etc.)?
- Does the item have an Australian Register of Therapeutic Goods (ARTG) number? Therapeutic Goods Administration (TGA) is Australia's regulatory authority for therapeutic goods. Visit: www.tga.gov.au.

Repairs / Maintenance:

- Is the item still covered by the warranty?
- Was the item banned by the manufacturer/supplier for safety reasons?
- Was the item recalled by the manufacturer/supplier for safety reasons?
- Was the item repaired previously? Who completed these repairs?
- Did the item have any changes made that will make it unsafe (e.g. wrong size mattress in a cot)? Are new parts that replace broken parts still compatible with the item?
- Can the item be fixed, if necessary, by the original supplier?
- Have you checked for mandatory safety standards or bans that may cover the second-hand product?

Buying Online

Check that the product is clearly identified, and all the important details are described, delivery options and costs are clear, and that you are able to easily contact the seller if anything goes wrong. This is particularly important when buying on auction or second-hand sites.

Safety standards apply to many products sold in Australia. If you buy from an overseas website, there is a risk that the product would not meet Australian standards. Look for statements that the item is certified to the relevant Australian standard.
